The Peony

To make more real our slogan—"Everything that is good and hardy"—we purchased in the Fall of 1924 the entire stock of Peonies from that lifelong enthusiast and specialist, Mr. E. A. Reeves, of Chagrin Falls, Ohio.

This stock of 100,000 plants includes the Gold Medal Collection with which he took many prizes.

We have studied this stock very carefully and have eliminated all varieties of questionable value, which gives us an extraordinarily high-class collection which assures you a well worth while Peony, no matter which one you may select. Note the general high rating throughout the list.

If June had done nothing but give us Roses, it would have been enough to have immortalized it as the Flower Month. But Nature is lavish of her gifts to the limit of prodigality. It would take more than a page to even mention the names of the flowers that bloom in June, and it is our purpose here to mention but one.

The Peony is a close rival of the Rose, either for planting or for cutting. Its iron-clad hardness, adaptability to varying soil and locations, its wealth of bloom, richness of fragrance, and variety of color, all go to make it a general favorite. So we find it in a single clump by the cottage door or in pleasing variety in the flower garden; in costly and rare varieties in the grounds of the collector, and in extensive plantings in parks and in the grounds of the wealthy.

The plant we send out is a strong, healthy, three- to five-eye plant, not the small two- to three-eye division often sold and which we believe is too small to give satisfaction. Our plants will often throw one or two good blooms the first season.

For more immediate effect, we advise the five- to nine-eye, three year clump.

September and October are the best months in which to plant Peonies, although they are planted fairly satisfactorily in March or early April. In planting, cover the "eyes" with about two inches of soil and use a slight mulch. Too deep planting is the cause of many Peonies not blooming. Fertilize with bonemeal, wood ashes and, sparingly, with stable manure.

The figure on the margin is the rating given by the Peony Society, using ten (10) as a perfect Peony.

You will note that we are listing only about seventy of the best kinds, making a good concise list which we believe will fill all of your requirements. However, we have a great many other varieties and would be glad to quote you on any special variety you may want.

Prices quoted are for plants with three to five eyes. Plants with five to nine eyes furnished at twice the price of the three- to five-eye plants.

The Iris

The Iris has justly been called the "Poor Man's Orchid." In curious shapes, in richness and variety of colorings, it is in close rivalry with that exquisite aristocrat among flowers, and what makes it more popular and valuable is that it requires none of the professional care and coddling which the Orchid must have.

Varieties can be selected which will grow in almost any kind of soil possessing a fair degree of fertility. Of course, the better the soil the more satisfactory will be the results.

Fertilize sparingly with bonemeal. Stable manure is injurious.

The Japanese Iris thrive much better in fairly heavy soil and a wet location. In planting, barely cover to the crown with soil.

Narcissus

For bedding, Narcissi should be planted the same as Tulips, or they may be forced in pots for Winter cutting or decoration. Many varieties are particularly desirable for cutting on account of their long stems and graceful, sweet-scented flowers.

When we learned of the embargo that was to go into effect on this fine class of bulbs, we decided to do our best to grow a sufficient quantity to accommodate our retail trade. We have succeeded in producing a limited quantity of fine bulbs that we are sure will give the best of satisfaction.

As we have less than half of our usual quantity to offer, we cannot guarantee delivery except on early orders.
